MILADY, IF YOU'D BE IN STYLE THIS YEAR

Women Who Wear Big Hats Will Look Countryfied This Spring.

CANNOT BE TOO LITTLE.

But They Will Be Altogether Chic and the Veil Will Be in Vogue.

The small hat has the place undissted for spring. The woman wearing big hat is going to feel as much out of the picture as though her headgear rere a toboggan cap or sweeping cap. and the huge feather-covered headpiece to which a few women, knowing its becomingness in or out of fashion, have faithfully clung this winter, looks somenow, countryfied and second-rate even more than skull caps with rolled up brims at the edge, have been worn on the Riviera this spring, and though the American milliners and manufacturers have been compelled to enlarge a little an these diminutive hats because the American woman will not accept the streme type of confure affected by the Parisienne, the new spring hats are very small, and most of them, because of this smallness, are very, very chic.

That this will be a season of veil popularity is a foregone conclusion, for smal hats always mean the vogue of volls. A vell over a big hat is so hard to adjust and often so uncomfortable to wear that many women refuse to take the trouble, but the small hat is made so complete and entirely chie by a emoothly drawn face-vell that hat and veil seem a part of each other. The veil pictured is a new spring model, with a delicate allover rose design. It is well draped over one of the small hats of the early season—a cream milan straw model trimmed with yellow tearoses and a fancy feather in the very smart terra cotta shade.

THEN THERE IS THE INAUGURA-TION VEIL.

Another interesting new voil is the model of tucked batiste trimmed with uguration pattern, with a Brussels net ground marked off in squares by ing new patterns that resemble lace so narrow lines of transverse stripes, while the stars are set in the open ands. The border has a river FINDS WIFE DYING ON FLOOR. ds. The border has a zigzag pattern, which is really made up of W's and M's, standing of course for the name of the President and Vice-Pres-ident to be. Fine dotted patterns are the favorites in face veilings, although shadow mesh patterns still retain a place in favor because of their returned to his spariment last evening invariable becomingness. The taupe after a walk he found his wife lying shadow meshes are especially well unconscious on the kitchen floor. She liked, but in the chenille dotted effects black is preferred.

Flowers have a place on the new spring hats, but that place is apt to be the lam end been absent for less than an hour. He immediately summoned Drs. Charge Stevenson of Na Int. West One at the back, or at one side near the back, with the blossoms arranged in very stiff and conventional fashion, in the effect of a feather fancy. This idea is suggested in one of the hats pictured. Two handsome roses, with natural-lookleaves, are poised in stiff precision death had been apoplexy and that exactly at the back of a straw turban, and in this stiff pose of the flowers lies the smartness of the hat. Let the blossoms droop ever so little, either backward or forward, and the chic effect would be lost completely. This hat is an elongated turban model of blue straw, and the roses are pale pink in tone. The hat accompanies a Russian blouse coat suit of blue lansdowne, a silk and wool material much in favor this spring.

SMART LITTLE EASTER HAT OF FANCY BLUE STRAW.

As shipshape as a rected sail in a gale is a smart little Easter hat of fancy blue straw, in a lovely new shade like nothing so much as the blue of Wedgwood pottery or the blue of deeply blue eyes That hat has the close line and the elongated-from-front-to-back effect so fashionable for spring, and its trimming is exceedingly simple—merely a fan bow of pleated velvet and two fancy feather ornaments—"question mark" ornaments, as they are called, because of their curied over tips in the shape of a big question mark. In this case the intertwining question marks might be said to be answering each other.

The sprouting feather at the front of the spring turban does not always curi over at its tip. Sometimes it rises straight upward for a foot or more above the hat. Straw hats are by no means occasional now; one meets them by the dozen every day. A low, boatwas seen worn in public to-day. The tall stickup at the front was in the same rich bronze color. Around the low crown was an inch-wide band of red ploot ribbon with a black edge, tled in a flat bow across the back of the hat, which was not more than three inches wide at that point, though the measurement from front to back must have been at least ten inches. Another ow of the narrow picot rabbon was net at the front, below the tail reddish-brown feather, and the simple effect was immensely chie.

The girl who because of adherence to tradition or for any other reason insists upon a literal Easter bonnet may please her taste this year with a dainty bounet like the one pictured. Though not es chic as the more severe turban with its stiffly upstanding ornament. this bonnet is entirely modish and most eurosque in style. It is made of cream to legnorn straw faced with shirred tak tulle over pink silk. The pulled rown to of pink silk, shirred at the over a cord. At the back this own is drawn down in pleats to give the clongated line now fashionable. At the left side of the front there is a algrette of pale pink paradice.

If you should spot a new point in New Horaid York's skyline during the next few days please notify Police Headquarters and the anxiety of the Hollberg family, at No. 408 East One Hundred and Thirtyeighth street, the Bronx, wil be re-Heved.

The head of the Hollbergs to-day reported to the police of the Alexander avenue station that his daughter, Irene. fifteen years old, has been missing since Feb. 20, and in giving the police her descriptin he incidentally mentioned that the child was 6 feet 6 inches tall and still growing rapidly. Two detectives of the station were given the case and were told about Irene's height. They thought the Hollbrene's height. They thought the Hollbergs had been reading "Alice in Wonderland" and wanted to put over a merry joke on them. At first they refused to believe there was any fifteenyear-old girl of that height missing in New York. With true Sherlocking, they pointed out that she would have to
